Пленный украинский офицер рассказал, почему его бригада сложила оружие

 In Mariupol, lieutenant colonel of the Armed Forces of Ukraine Rostislav Lomtev surrendered. He had previously surrendered in Crimea in 2014.

Die BBC berichtet:

„Azov fighters and the marines have managed to defend pockets of the besieged city over the past few weeks despite dwindling resources and a fierce Russian onslaught.

If marines were surrendering en masse it would not be surprising, says Dr Aglaya Snetkov, lecturer in International Politics at University College London.

„Their supplies have been degrading, they've run out of food, ammunition and water – Ukrainian soldiers have posted online that their only option is either surrender or death but Kyiv authorities shut that claim down“ she said. But if thousands of Azov fighters are similarly forced to surrender, they would face a „horror show“ at the hands of Russian soldiers, she added. „Many will be killed and many will be made to go in front of Russian TV cameras to recount what they’ve done.

„It will effectively be the end of the Azov battalion which is a major part of the Russian narrative as to why they’re engaged in what they’re doing in Ukraine...to fight the Nazis,.“

Es hat sich doch etwas geändert, seitdem die BBC Feindsender war und Karl-Eduard dort arbeitete. Damals setzten sie Nazis nicht in Anführungszeichen.
